Israeli People Exonerate Principal Of "Lavon Affair", Once Minister Of Defence, Although Premier Ben-Gurion Is Unreconciled At Heart

Premier David Ben-Gurion, of Israel, decided to yield, at least for the time being, to a ruling by his Cabinet that cleared Pinhas Lavon of all responsibility for a disastrous security adventure in 1954.

This was stated by the Premier's office, which added that Mr. Ben-Gurion had also made a peace offering to Minister of Justice Pinhas Rosen, who headed a seven-member Cabinet committee that cleared Mr. Lavon, says the New York Times. The committee's findings were accepted by a majority of the Cabinet.

Mr. Rosen submitted a motion at a Cabinet meeting that all the ministers resign because of Premier Ben-Gurion's public display of a lack of confidence in the coalition group for its action absolving Mr. Lavon.

The undisclosed security operation that led to Mr. Lavon's resignation as Defense Minister is believed to have been an espionage ring in Cairo discovered by the Egyptians in October, 1954. Mr. Lavon resigned in February, 1955, two weeks after Egypt had hanged several persons as spies. Mr. Ben-Gurion succeeded Mr. Lavon in the defense post before becoming Premier later that year.

The Premier, at a recent meeting of the central organization of Mapai, the party to which both he and Mr. Lavon belong, read aloud a letter he had sent to Mr. Rosen on January 8 in which he said he "did not feel it morally possible," to take part in the Cabinet committee's conclusions on Mr. Lavon.

"I was shocked by the conclusions, which I regarded as characterized by unfairness, half-truths, and a miscarriage of justice," the Premier's letter had said. "I saw evidence of bias in the things that you investigated and those you did not investigate," it added.

Mr. Ben-Gurion wrote to Mr. Rosen again, a source told the New York Times, and retracted the part of the letter in which he had accused the ministers of bias. The source added that the Premier felt other charges were matters of opinion and could hardly be construed as insults.

Premier Ben-Gurion was said to have decided not to press his demands for a new judicial inquiry into the question of responsibility for the 1954 adventure. The Cabinet committee found that forgery had been employed by a witness at an earlier inquiry to blame Mr. Lavon for the security operation.

The source said that Premier Ben-Gurion's decision not to seek another inquiry meant he was willing to come back and sit at the head of the Government even though he found the decision to clear Mr. Lavon personally unacceptable.

He added that the Premier had expectations that the Mapai party was now prepared to bring some action of its own against Mr. Lavon, at least to the extent of criticizing the public manner to which Mr. Lavon finally resorted in an effort to exonerate himself.

Premier David Ben-Gurion had accused Pinhas Lavon of having organized Opposition parties in a campaign of "backbiting and slander" in a "poisonous war" against the party to which both men belong. Mr. Lavon, the Premier said, was using such tactics to clear himself of blame for the operation six and a half years ago when he was Minister of Defense.

The Premier laid his charges against Mr. Lavon before the 301-member central committee of Mapai, the labor party. Mr. Lavon was absolved of all responsibility for the operation by a committee of seven Cabinet ministers. The Cabinet approved the committee's finding in December.

Mr. Ben-Gurion, however, had refused to accept the Cabinet's decision. He had taken a vacation from his Governmental functions, leaving his party with the problem, says the New York Times. In his recent speech before the party leaders, Mr. Ben-Gurion read the letter he had sent to Pinhas Rosen, Minister of Justice and chairman of the committee that absolved Mr. Lavon of responsibility for the operation.

"I cannot say that Lavon gave the order (for the operation), for I did not hear it, but I read his statements to the Foreign Affairs and Security Committee in October, and I found in them not only arrogance and insolence, but falsehoods and slanders about the defense establishment in and before his time."

Mr. Ben-Gurion had opposed hearings that the committee of the Knesset (Parliament) had conducted into the "Lavon affair" on the ground that members would be governed by political considerations. All parties but the Communists are represented on the committee.

"I was convinced — and I am still convinced — that if it is necessary to inquire whose version is the true one, this should be done by a judicial inquiry — both sides being interrogated and giving evidence, and each side cross-examining the other or submitting witnesses or documents to demonstrate the truth of his version."

The Premier said he had come to understand since reading the evidence given to the Knesset committee from last October and studying developments of the last three months why Mr. Lavon preferred to have his story heard by them.

During the last three months, Mr. Ben-Gurion said, Mr. Lavon had mobilized all his party's enemies "for an effective and poisonous war against the Israeli Labor party and certain members of it who, for some reason, did not find favor in the eyes of the Minister of Defense of 1954."

The "certain members" Mr. Ben-Gurion referred to, says the New York Times, were himself, Shimon Peres, Deputy Defense Minister, and Mr. Dayan, Minister of Agriculture.

The security operation that led to the resignation in 1955 of Pinhas Lavon as Defense Minister is generally believed to have been an espionage operation in Cairo that was discovered by the Egyptians.

Because of censorship in Israel, correspondents have been permitted to describe the reasons for Mr. Lavon's dismissal only in general terms.

The Government of Gamal Abdel Nasser uncovered the Cairo spy ring in October, 1954, and arrested twelve men and one woman. After a lengthy trial, several of the alleged conspirators were hanged on February 1, 1955.

Mr. Lavon's resignation was announced two weeks later. He was succeeded in the defense post by Mr. Ben-Gurion, who came out of retirement. Mr. Ben-Gurion became Premier later that year.

Recently, some Middle East diplomats have been reported as believing the resignation had been caused by an Israeli raid on an Egyptian military post in the Gaza Strip. The raid, it has been said, warned President Nasser of the modern weapons with which the Israeli Army was equipped. This led President Nasser to seek modern arms from the Soviet Union, it was said.

However, Mr. Lavon's resignation was announced before the Gaza raid was made on February 28, 1955. Mr. Lavon submitted his resignation to Premier Moshe Sharett on February 2, 1955.

The principal of "the Lavon affair," a controversy in Israel for almost seven years, is a man of calm persuasiveness and easy charm. But beneath the charm there is a stubborn will, says the

Was Editor For 30 Years Of Magazine Of Complete Freedom

Samuel M. Levitas, executive editor for the last thirty years of The New Leader, a liberal weekly magazine, died in New York, at Lenox Hill Hospital, after a week's illness. His age was 66 years. He lived at 295 St. John's Place, Brooklyn. Mr. Levitas was a Russian journalist and political official —a Menshevik or moderate socialist, who fled his homeland in the days leading up to its seizure by the Bolsheviks.

On his second and permanent return here in 1923, he became active as a lecturer in Social-Democratic circles and served on the editorial board of The Jewish Daily Forward, says the New York Times. In 1930 he joined The New Leader and he soon became executive editor.

He was born in Kiev in the Russian Ukraine, went to the United States as a young man and studied in Chicago. When the Russian Revolution started in 1917, Mr. Levitas returned to Russia to Vladivostok, where he was elected vice mayor and named a delegate to the Russian Congress that ratified the Brest-Litovsk treaty with Germany.

After the Bolsheviks seized power, Mr. Levitas was jailed several times because of his anti-Bolshevik activities. He escaped to Poland in 1923 and then returned to New York.

Up until 1936, The New Leader had been the official organ of the American Socialist Party, but the publication broke from the party in that year. It broke away because of fear that a portion of the party was going off in anti-democratic directions. For years the magazine had been published from a crowded office at 7 East Fifteenth Street, just a stone's throw from The Daily Worker, perhaps its most persistent critic.

Under Mr. Levitas' editorship the publication in the early Nineteen Thirties reported the horrors of the forced starvation of 3,000,000 kulaks in the Ukraine and north Caucasus. Six months before the Russo-German pact in 1939, the publication prophesied such a pact would be signed. The weekly

Three Major U.S. Jewish Groups Protest To U.N. On Soviet Refusal To Permit Family Reunions

Three major Jewish groups have filed a report charging the Soviet Union with discriminating against Jews in emigration policies aimed at reuniting families separated by war and political turmoil, says the New York Times.

The twenty-four-page memorandum, prepared by Bnai Brith of the United States; the Board of Jewish Deputies of Great Britain; and the South African Board of Jewish Deputies, also gave details of emigration policies in other East European countries and in North Africa as they affect Jews.

The memorandum was submitted to the United Nations Subcommission for the Prevention of Discrimination and the Protection of Minorities in response to its request that governments and interested institutions provide information.

The report quoted statements by Premier Khrushchev and other Soviet leaders, and cited news accounts of cases in which the reunion of families and even of ethnic groups had been authorized. The report held that the Soviet Union had been "sympathetically disposed" to the practice of reuniting families "except in the case of Soviet Jews."

The contents of the report were made public by Philip M. Klutznick, chairman of Bnai Brith's International Council.

The following is from Israel Digest: Out of over nine thousand requests by Israelis for members of their families in the Soviet Union to be allowed to join them, only a small number have been granted, said Golda Meir, the Israeli Minister for Foreign Affairs, in the Knesset in answer to a parliamentary question. The questioner, Herzl Berger, had referred to the reported statement of Mr. Khrushchev, the Soviet Prime Minister, that "there are in the files of our Foreign Ministry no applications by persons of the Jewish or other nations wanting to emigrate to Israel."

"The concept of reunion of families is not at all obscure, and for a Jew it is no subject for joking," Mrs. Meir declared in her reply. "Thousands of residents of Israel are incessantly appealing to the Israel Government, urgently seeking help to bring their kin from the Soviet Union to be re-united with their families in Israel. The situation of these families is the tragic outcome of the disasters of the War and the Nazi holocaust, which destroyed and dispersed families that had been saved from Nazi extermination, which separated parents from children, husbands from wives, and brothers from sisters, and broke up other family units.

"In the last five years, residents of Israel have sent to their relatives in the Soviet Union, at the latters' request, 9,236 requests ('Vizov' in Russian), asking for their kinsfolk in the Soviet Union

New Season In Bermuda, Kinder To The Jews

BY HAROLD BRAVERMAN, DIRECTOR OF THE NATIONAL DISCRIMINATIONS DEPARTMENT OF THE ANTI-DEFAMATION LEAGUE OF B'NAI B'RITH

No matter when tourists visit Bermuda the twenty-one square miles of coral-covered, limestone hills rising out of the Atlantic 600 miles off Cape Hatteras, they find this British Crown Colony to be an island paradise, warmed by the Gulf Stream, endowed with luxuriant foliage and great expanses of pink sand beach.

In the past forty years — and particularly since World War II — Bermuda has gained a reputation of being one of the most splendid resort areas in the Western Hemisphere.

It has also gained another type of reputation: as a place where anti-Jewish discrimination was as rampant as the oleander covering the landscape.

To what extent was this reputation justified? How strong is anti-Jewish prejudice in Bermuda today? To find answers to these and related questions, I recently made a first-hand study of the attitudes and practices of the island's hotel and guest houses. I interviewed hotel executives and local officials, industrialists, bankers and scores of other Bermudians for a reflection of attitudes toward Jewish visitors.

As an Anti-Defamation League official concerned for many years with anti-Jewish discrimination, I had a good idea of the facts about Bermuda's practices in the past. The post-World War II period was marked by a spate of complaints charging discrimination by Bermuda's resorts, reports of crude denials of accommodations to Jewish guests. More often than not, ADL investigations revealed that the complaints were justified, the reputation deserved.

I find today that the picture has radically changed. Some vestiges of history remain but the happy fact in 1960 is that Bermuda and its principal industry — tourism — want no part of religious bigotry. Bermuda does want American tourists who will conform to local customs. But it understands that conformity — or lack of it - has no relationship to religious beliefs.

Many forces - including morality, business, and the law — combined to bring about this salutary change. Anti-Jewish bigotry in Bermuda is an unmourned relic of an unlamented past. In fact, so sensitive are Bermuda resort officials to old charges of prejudice that they now express a new problem: what should they do when a resort guest, who happens to be Jewish, behaves badly? Will they be accused of anti-Semitism if they ask him to leave — even though their action has nothing at all to do with his religion?

A look at Bermuda's past helps explain the situation today. At first Bermuda — which is still completely subject to British law and the Crown — drew her visitors largely from England. Her relationship to the United States in the early 1900's was limited mainly to her role as a supplier of Easter lilies and Bermuda onions. (Bermuda onions are now usually grown in Texas.) Between the two world wars, the Furness Line began expanding resort hotels in Bermuda as an adjunct to its cruises out of New York. Tourism increased rapidly to the point where American tourist dollars became a mainstay of Bermuda's economy.

World War II — and the lack of available cruise ships — kept Bermuda's hotels empty. But the tourist industry was revitalized after the war. The cruises started again and, most important, Kindley Field — built and equipped by the U.S. Air Force for wartime use — was quickly converted into a modern, civilian airport to handle additional tourist trade. Bermuda's hotels began to multiply and flourish as profitable business institutions.

Then the complaints of anti-Jewish discrimination became most frequent. One major Bermuda hotel consistently wrote to prospective guests indicating that it catered only to Christians. Another repeatedly rejected Jews while simultaneously accepting Christians. A third had such a reputation for rigid anti-Semitism that protests were voiced in the British Parliament when it was chosen as the meeting site for the American, British, and French heads of state in 1959.

Many smaller inns and guest houses followed the lead of the pacemakers and shut their doors against guests who were (or appeared to be) Jewish. In one case, a man with a non-revealing surname arrived at night at a Bermuda hotel where he had made reservations. Before he could even register, he was accosted by a hotel official who asked whether he was Jewish. When the guest said yes, he was ordered to leave.

In short, during the 40's and 50's, there developed in the minds of many American Jews a picture of Bermuda as an off-limits resort hotel area. The image was re-enforced about five years ago when a magazine article stated that a "Bermuda Tourist Bureau" had developed a code for use by travel agents in identifying the race or religion of prospective guests. The code words were the names of Bermuda flowers: Oleander meant Gentile; Hibiscus, Jewish; Geranium, Negro; and Poinciana, Asiatic.

The article received wide currency in the American Jewish community and left readers with the impression that the "Bermuda Tourist Bureau" was an official government agency. (The impression was damaging and unfair. I learned in Bermuda that the "Bermuda Tourist Bureau" is a small private enterprise operated by a real estate and travel agent who has little connection with the Bermuda hotel industry and none with the Bermuda government).

Despite the reports of anti-Semitism in Bermuda, many American Jews continued to travel there by ship and air. Most of them were booked by travel agents into one of two hotels which soon acquired reputations as being the only places where Jews could be comfortable.

At first, discrimination by Bermuda hotels seemed beyond the reach of an action program by ADL. The hotels of this Crown Colony were invulnerable to American legal action. Bermuda's distance from the United States made personal discussions with hotel operators impracticable. Two years ago, however, ADL sought and obtained the friendly intervention of a major airline which flies to Bermuda. We pointed out that Jewish customers who had tried to purchase a package vacation plan in Bermuda from the airline never seemed to be able to buy accommodations at one major hotel. The airline then made its own informal approaches to the hotel; Jews were soon accepted as guests there.

This small encouragement, however, was more than offset by a revelation made in January 1960. A U.S. hotel representative for a major Bermuda hotel was charged with engaging in a program to reduce the number of Jewish guests there and, conversely, to increase the number of Christian guests. The story was told in a front-page report in the National Jewish Post with accompanying documentation. Since then, the New York State Attorney General has been investigating to find out if the American hotel representative has violated the New York State law against discrimination by places of public accommodation. The publication of this story brought about a revival of interest in Bermuda and its practices concerning Jews.

ADL met with the New York staff of the Bermuda Trade Development Board, a Bermuda government agency, who said that the widespread rumors about anti-Semitism in Bermuda were completely false. It also promised every co-operation in arriving at the truth. ADL was urged to send a representative to meet directly with hotel people and government officials and to make its own free inquiries.

ADL's first step was to send a letter to each of the 83 hotels and guest houses in Bermuda asking, in substance, whether religious tests were used in selecting guests and whether Jews were welcome equally with Christians. With few (and unimportant) exceptions, all replied and indicated that religion was not a test of a guest's acceptability. Even those who talked vaguely about "social compatability" said clearly that they were unconcerned with the religion of guests.

A most significant reply came from Arnold Feldman, the owner of Summerside Inn in Somerset, Bermuda. Mr. Feldman wrote glowingly of Bermuda and of the complete acceptance which he and his wife, both Jewish, had experienced since settling there two years ago. He echoed the suggestion of the Bermuda Trade Development Board that I, as an ADL representative, come to the islands to see for myself.

During my stay, I found that Mr. and Mrs. Feldman, a young and attractive couple from Wellesley, Massachusetts, are indeed regarded warmly by native Bermudians. In two years, they have earned a respected place in the community. The other half (literally) of the permanent Jewish population of Bermuda are Mr. and Mrs. Myer Malloy who, like the Feldmans, are citizens of the United States. Mr. Malloy has been in business in Bermuda for over 40 years, is a highly regarded real estate man. He says unequivocally that Bermuda, despite some sins of the past, is now relatively free of religious bias.

Other Bermudians — ranging from cab drivers and waitresses to industrial leaders — also convinced me that this is so. Indeed it quickly became evident that Bermuda's intergroup problem is not religious but racial. Of Bermuda's population of 46,000, two-thirds are Negroes. They constitute the labor force of Bermuda but are also represented in the professions and in the colonial legislature. As British citizens, they enjoy full equality under the law but they have not yet achieved equality in fact. Separate schools are maintained for whites and Negroes.

Bermuda's restaurants and bars (including those in hotels) started to accept Negro patronage only about a year ago. Negroes generally still cannot get rooms in Bermuda hotels — although there are rumors of unpublicized break-

Theodor Herzl And Africa

BY ELIAHU BEN-HORIN

To many readers, particularly those who remember their Zionist history, the title of this article is bound to prove misleading. Let it therefore be stated at the outset that it has nothing to do with Uganda and the British offer to Herzl for Jewish colonization there.

"If not Uganda," the question will be asked, "what is there to write about Herzl and Africa?" The man was a European par excellence, the Zionist movement in Herzl's days was primarily European, and Palestine lies not in Africa but in Asia Minor.

All this is certainly true. Yet, there is a great deal to be said about the historic role played by Herzl and the Zionist idea in the liberation of the African colonial peoples. Indeed, it is rather surprising that political writers and historians have failed to notice and remark the link between Zionism and African freedom.

In Herzl's visionary novel, "Altneuland", there is a touching passage about the African Negro, where Professor Steineck, one of the book's heroes, says: "There is an unsolved problem, a great tragedy of human suffering that only we Jews can fully comprehend. I mean the Negro problem. . . . Now that I have lived to see the return of the Jews, I wish I could prepare the way for the return of the Negroes."

And then again:

"That's why I work at the opening up of Africa. All men should have a homeland. Then they will be kinder toward each other. They will understand each other better and love their brethren better."

This expression in "Altneuland" of compassion for the downtrodden peoples of Africa is certainly indicative of Theodor Herzl's broad liberalism, which was not confined to the needs and problems of his own people. Nor would one quarrel with "Professor Steineck's" assertion that the Jews — because of their tragic experiences and suffering throughout the ages — could better understand the suffering and the problems of the Negroes. While this is eminently true, there is no evidence, however, that in founding political Zionism, Herzl's aspirations went one iota beyond the restoration of Jewish statehood and nationhood in Palestine.

Nevertheless, a sober analysis of events and developments will prove that Zionism, in pursuing its limited objective of a Jewish State in Palestine, became the trail-blazer of political liberation for all small non-self-governing peoples — including, by the way, the Arab peoples which are now bent on the destruction of Zionism and on the annihilation of the Jewish State. Also, Zionism was a major factor in the gradual liquidation of colonial imperialism.

At the conclusion of World War I, imperialism was dealt a deadly blow from which it never recovered. We refer to the institution of the League of Nations' Mandates for the administration of certain colonial territories. It was a new and revolutionary concept in international politics.

Who had ever heard of victorious powers not being allowed freely to dispose of the spoils of war? Why then were the Allies in World War I denied this basic right of the victor? Why could they not divide between them the former provinces of the defeated and prostrated Ottoman Empire? Why could not Great Britain simply annex Palestine and Iraq as two more "crown colonies" in her empire? And France do the same with Syria and Lebanon?

To be sure, there were the Fourteen Points of Wilson, declaring the right of all nations to self-determination. However, it is well known that Lloyd George and Clemenceau, the respective Prime Ministers at the time of Britain and France, were most adept in ignoring and circumventing the idealistic postulates of the American President. With all due respect, Wilson's influence at the peace conference and in the inter-Allied negotiations was not strong enough to make Britain and France abdicate their claims to the fruits of victory.

In addition to Wilson's Fourteen Points, there had to be another and more compelling reason for this radical departure from traditional international practices. There was — and its name was "Zionism."

Twenty years had passed between Herzl's proclamation of the Jewish claim to Palestine, in 1897, and the issuance of the Balfour Declaration, in 1917. Only twenty short years, but there it was: an official and solemn pledge by Great Britain, subsequently endorsed by its allies in World War I, that, if victory would be theirs, they would support and facilitate the establishment of a Jewish National Home in Palestine.

However "diplomatic" and ambiguous was the wording of the Balfour Declaration, there was no getting away from the fact that it put the stamp of validity on the Zionist claim to Palestine and that it contained a definite undertaking to this effect. It was this commitment to Zionism that stood as the most formidable stumbling block to the simple incorporation of Palestine in Britain's colonial empire.

Under the circumstances, new means had to be found, whereby Britain's rule of Palestine would be secured but at the same time the international commitment to Zionism would be honored. The answer to this dilemma was found in entrusting the administration of Palestine to Great Britain under a "mandate" of the League of Nations. As the "mandatory government," Great Britain was accountable to the League of Nations and was to submit annual reports on the administration of Palestine to the League's Mandates Commission.

Once this new principle of international trusteeship was accepted for Palestine, it was only natural that it be applied to a number of other territories: Iraq, Syria, Lebanon, etc. There is no question, however, that it was primarily the Palestine problem which had caused the "invention" of the mandate system.

It is highly probable that the leaders of the great colonial powers did not realize at the time the ultimate impact of the "mandate" on the future of colonialism. For all we know, they might even have considered it a clever and adroit way for furthering their colonial empires. For, on the one hand, the mandate system enabled them to make a graceful bow to the spirit of the times, while, on the other hand, they became the factual rulers of these territories, albeit in the name of the League of Nations.

Inasmuch, however, as the victors in World War I were in complete control of the League of Nations, London and Paris were inclined to consider the whole thing as a mere formality, or a minor inconvenience. That these were the dominant considerations is best proven by the fact that Britain placed her mandated territories under the jurisdiction of the Colonial Office. As far as Britain was concerned, there was no intention of differentiating much between "mandated colonies" and the old-fashioned colonies of the British crown.

The rude awakening came years later, when the colonial powers began to realize that they had badly underestimated the true political significance of the mandate innovation. From the moment the first mandated administration was established, the world community of nations was granted a legal status vis-à-vis the peoples and lands under colonial rule. Henceforth, colonial rule was no longer the exclusive domain of the respective empires, an internal "domestic" proposition in which outsiders could not meddle. However small in size might have been that window which the mandate had opened in the high walls surrounding the colonial empires, it was large enough to let the critical eye of the outside world have a good look at what was happening inside the walls.

From there, it was only one small and logical step for the outside world to raise its voice in criticism, and proffer suggestions and demands. While a given debate in the Mandates Commission of the League of Nations was concerned with one mandated country — Palestine, Syria, or Iraq, for example — the effect of each such discussion was immediate and worldwide. Who could tell the people of India, Ceylon, the Gold Coast, Indochina, or Cyprus that what was happening in Geneva did not have a direct bearing on their own situations?

Before long, the small mandate window grew into a wide breach in the imperial walls. The awakening had begun among the colonial peoples, the surge for individual and collective dignity, for complete equality with the white man, for the right to own and control their own countries — for all that which goes into the concept of political independence and sovereignty. Viewed in historical perspective, it was the Palestine Mandate that opened the way to that process of colonial liberation which is now proceeding at an accelerated pace.

There is, moreover, another aspect of the role played by Zionism in the liberation of the colonial peoples. Jewish-Zionist Palestine has taught them how to fight against overwhelming odds for freedom and independence. The leaders and spokesmen of the EOKA organization in Cyprus have frankly admitted on sundry occasions that they learned from the Jewish example in Palestine how to fight against the British and how to persist against uneven odds until they were able to win freedom for Cyprus. Whether other ex-colonial peoples will be as generous as the Cypriotes in giving credit to Zionist instruction or not, there is not the slightest doubt that all of them derived encouragement and faith in their ultimate victory from the struggle in Palestine.

In retrospect, it should be observed that although Theodor Herzl was not consciously furthering the cause of African freedom nothing would have pleased him more than to know that in striking out for Jewish freedom he had paved the way for the liberation of all oppressed peoples.

WHAT MAKES A PARTY?

Well, first of all, good company makes a party. Good food, good drink, and good music all help. We can't provide the food, we don't have a liquor licence, and it's up to you to provide the company. But we do know how to provide the entertainment — that's our business.

If you want to be lavish, you could hire us to play Beethoven. We've done it before. But most people like their parties to have relaxing, happy, entertaining music. We can give you just what you want — big bands, little bands, singers, instrumentalists, and dancers.

As we said, that's our business. Why not call us?

NEW SEASON IN BERMUDA, KINDER TO THE JEWS

throughs in this area too. Most people I spoke to acknowledged in one way or another, that Bermuda may become an arena in the conflict over racial integration and equality.

In this context, it is understandable that Bermuda wants to lay the ghost of anti-Semitism for good. Unanimously, the hotel people and officials told me that there ought not to be any religious tests for prospective guests and that, so far as they had control, there were none. Some hotel men pointed the finger at American hotel representatives as prime culprits in creating anti-Semitic policies. It was this group, I was told, that had deliberately fostered the "no Jews" motif in order to cater to snob appeal and exclusiveness.

The hotel men were not cast from a single mold. They ranged from the hearty extrovert who said that he "didn't give a damn about religion" and just wanted to keep his rooms filled to the serious, thoughtful sophisticate who talked at length about social discrimination and its implications. He believed that anti-Jewish barriers in private clubs — particularly in the northeastern United States — are the well-springs of all discriminations.

Almost universally, they asked me two questions:

— "What to do about a Jewish guest who misbehaves?"

— "Does the ADL immediately go to court when it gets a complaint of anti-Jewish discrimination?"

My answer to the first question was that it was meaninglessly narrow because of the word "Jewish"; a hotel has the unquestioned right to discipline any ill-mannered guest, so long as standards of behavior are applied without regard to religion. The second query reflected their fear that civil rights organizations would accept complaints without inves-

Let Ben-Gurion Retract Or Be Removed

BY SONIA FERBER, NOTED AMERICAN AUTHOR

The following appeared as a letter to the New York Times:

Writers who write imaginatively are reluctant to involve themselves in political or national or international turmoil. To do so almost invariably results in conflict of a disturbing nature. As writers are emotionally vulnerable (for they wouldn't be writers) this can seriously affect one of the most cherished things in their lives: their work. There are times when this reluctance must be overcome.

David Ben-Gurion, Premier of Israel, has publicly issued a statement quoting the Talmud, Jewish book of the early religious law: "Whoever dwells outside the land of Israel is considered to have no God." He further suggested that it is the duty of Jews in America to come to dwell in Israel and to send their sons and daughters to be educated in that country.

To an American-born citizen, grand-daughter of a German-born liberal and intellectual who came by choice to the United States 113 years ago with that great exponent of freedom, Carl Schurz, these statements quoted seem not merely insolent and arrogant; they are the utterances of dictatorship.

They are as monstrous as though there should be issued from Rome, seat of the Catholic Church, a statement that all Catholics who live outside Italy have no God; and that all Catholics outside Italy should come to Italy to dwell. Quite aside from a definitely over-cosy condition which this would create abroad, it would deprive this country of ours of a terrific young man named John Fitzgerald Kennedy to whose Administration as President of the United States of America I look forward with the most exhilarating anticipation, having voted for him.

As an American, a civilized human being, and a descendant of many generations of Jews, I find Ben-Gurion's statement not only personally infuriating but potentially destructive. In October, 1960, I returned from a visit to Israel. I had gone strictly under my own steam as a tourist. I was interested in the truly amazing and almost incredible and frequently exasperating aspects of this gigantic achievement.

Loyal citizens of the United States had contributed millions and millions of dollars and countless hours of thought and work to insure the security and comfort of the homeless, the suffering, the hopeless who had migrated to Israel; and to the new generation of the hopeful, the buoyant, the resolved now springing up. To these American well-wishers, to their foreign co-religionists, these Ben-Gurion statements must have come with an almost Hitler-like force.

It is not out of order to say that Ben-Gurion should retract his statement as quoted or that he be removed from office, his splendid work of earlier years finished, before he shall prove the undoing of future plans for Israel.

THREE MAJOR U.S.

to come here. This type of request is required by the Soviet authorities from every person who submits an application to join his family in Israel: each is presented in respect of a whole family, so that the number I have given embraces many thousands of individuals.

"Only a few out of this total have as yet had the good fortune to be united with their families in Israel.

"We have many replies in our possession from the Red Cross of the Soviet Union to Israelis who asked them to intercede with the Soviet authorities to permit relations to be reunited with their families in Israel. The replies are in almost stereotyped phrasing: that the competent Soviet authorities did not see sufficient reason to grant the application.

"We know of tragic cases of separation of children from parents, of husbands from wives, of old parents who after fifteen years of separation are longing to reach their kindred in Israel. All our efforts in numerous cases over more than ten years have failed to elicit response or understanding from the Soviet Union.

"It only remains to hope that the Government of the Soviet Union will re-examine the facts and show a greater measure of understanding and of readiness to solve the tragic human problem."

ISRAELI PEOPLE EXONERATE PRINCIPAL OF "LAVON AFFAIR"

New York Times. It is this latter trait that led Pinhas Lavon into conflict with Premier David Ben-Gurion. Mr. Ben-Gurion's description in Tel Aviv of Mr. Lavon as "a liar" would seem finally to close any door to a reconciliation between the Premier and the younger man he apparently had once picked as his successor.

Mr. Lavon possesses a gentle, almost rabbinical manner. His straight hair, nearly white, is accentuated by dark, arching eyebrows that seem to express surprise and innocence. The effect is one of sweet reasonableness.

Behind this facade, his friends say, Mr. Lavon is imperious and, at times, vengeful. Even so, they say, he is more patient than Mr. Ben-Gurion in settling accounts.

Mr. Lavon was born Pinhas Lubianiker on July 12, 1904, in the Polish town of Kopizince, Eastern Galicia. He adopted the Hebrew name Lavon after he migrated to the British mandate of Palestine in 1929. His name is pronounced Lah-von.

Mr. Lavon says he first met anti-Semitism when he was severely beaten by a gang of fellow students at the University of Lwow. He has told friends the students' only charge against him was that he was a Jew.

For two years after his arrival in Palestine, he worked as a laborer in Hadera and helped to found a settlement at Hulda. Mr. Lavon became active in Histadrut, the Israeli labor federation, and in the Mapai party, where he soon gained a reputation as a debater, says the New York Times. Premier Ben-Gurion began to groom him for public office.

Soon after Mr. Ben-Gurion became Premier, he made Mr. Lavon his Minister of Agriculture and later Defense Minister. Mr. Lavon was elected a member of the Knesset (Parliament) in 1949 and has been a member since.

His enemies criticized him as an administrator. They say he inspired bitterness among subordinates. His friends say his main value to Ben-Gurion was shown when, as Minister Without Portfolio, he represented the Government's position in debates in the Knesset.

During the long investigation of the security operation of 1954 that led to his dismissal as Defense Minister, Mr. Lavon consistently said the charges against him were a result of a conspiracy by his subordinates in the Defense Ministry.

Mr. Lavon lives with his wife, Lusia, in a fifth-floor flat in Tel Aviv. His chief recreation is attending concerts, theatre performances, and the movies with her. They customarily attend at least two movie showings a week.

One of Mr. Lavon's greater forensic efforts, his friends say, was an address a year ago to a Mapai party convention. As friends recall the speech, Mr. Lavon never raised his voice, used few adjectives, and never descended to invective. Yet, they say, he made such a devastating attack on the opposition Herut party that the address became a basic campaign document, says the New York Times. Mr. Ben-Gurion was so impressed that he referred to Mr. Lavon's speech seventeen times in his own address to the party convention.

Whatever the result of the struggle between the two, Mr. Lavon has apparently won exoneration by the Israeli people. In movie theatres recently, it is said, appearances by Mr. Lavon in newsreels have registered greater applause than those of the Premier.

also attacked the Teheran, Yalta, and Potsdam agreements from the beginning, contending that the U.S. had been taken in.

Although it paid nothing for articles, contributors included such writers as John Dewey, Bertrand Russell, Carl Sandburg, Adolf A. Berle Jr., Prof. Sidney Hook, and Granville Hicks, among others.

The periodical's great appeal to writers is its complete freedom of expression, says the New York Times. This was described in a New York Times editorial on the occasion of its thirty-first year in 1954 as offering "a forum for all sorts of liberals, a term which automatically excludes both Communists and the strange gentry of the Nazi or Fascist right."

NEW SEASON IN BERMUDA, KINDER TO THE JEWS

tigation and convict the accused without a fair hearing.

The question was put graphically by one hotel manager who said he recently had to ask a Jewish couple to leave because of their behavior. (This particular hotel has entertained many Jewish guests.) He learned later that the couple had complained to their travel agent in New York City that the hotel was anti-Semitic and had said they were going to tell the Anti-Defamation League about the situation. The manager asked whether they had done so; I told him that they had not. He then asked what we would have done if the couple had come to us. Would the ADL have assumed that the complaint was valid and filed a complaint with a law enforcement authority?

I explained ADL procedures to this man and all the others who asked about them. (All complainants are interviewed by professional staff members of the ADL who evaluate truthfulness and who seek out witnesses. Sometimes, ADL itself dismisses complaints as being invalid or of a crackpot nature.

If ADL, on investigation, believes that the complaint has substance, and if any hope exists for adjustment of the complaint by conference and negotiation, the next step is always a conference with the allegedly offending party, whether it is a hotel, an employer, or a school.) This seemed to assure them that they would not be brought to task on a spurious charge of anti-Semitism, and that they are not taking more of a risk in accepting Jewish guests than they are in accepting Christian ones.

Certainly, the hard sociological and economic facts of life have contributed to the positive attitudes I met. Bermuda's economic and political leadership is concerned with growing pressures from the native Negro population. It is troubled by some decrease in Bermuda's hotel business this year. It is aware of the implications of ADL's educational activities as they affect the patronage of discriminatory hotels by convention groups.

It also recognizes that 80% of Bermuda's hotel business comes from the northeastern United States where law enforcement authorities have, increasingly, been taking action against out-of-state discriminatory hotels that solicit business within their areas. These are practical persuasions to morality. Because of them, most of the practice of anti-Semitic discrimination in Bermuda is over. But the memory still remains; it may be a few more seasons in the sun before it is gone.
